

New England's Fifty Finest

The "Fifty Finest" mountain peaks are the 50 summits with the highest topographic prominence in New England. ("Prominence" is defined as the distance between a summit and the lowest contour line surrounding it. Think of it as the minimum "climbing distance" to reach the summit.)

Mount Washington, at 6,288ft, is both the highest mountain in New England and the most prominent, rising 6,150 feet above its key col.

The peak of Mount Greylock, the only Massachusetts peak in the Fifty Finest, is the highest point in the state.

Though Belknap Mountain is the lowest peak in the Fifty Finest, its isolation still gives it a prominence of 1,850 feet.
